

The protests continue after ending of the immunity of universities in Greece! - 14 November 2019

The conservative New Democracy, which came to power in July in Greece, put an end to the immunity of universities and contradicted the left and anarchist groups in the universities, causing political and social upheavals throughout the country. As a result of the developments, university students launched an occupation action in many universities. Students will continue their actions until Sunday, the anniversary of the November 17 student uprising against the Colonel's Junta in 1973.